

Having devoted most of her life to sports, Kromah still aims to acquire another profession. She decided to become a lawyer because of the injustices in Liberia against women. So choosing this profession, she will be able to help women get equal opportunities, break gender barriers and give back to people who desperately need help. Girls who can not afford to go to school or people who have been mistreated in court because they cannot defend themselves or do not have a good lawyer to fight for a reasonable cost are examples of unfairness.

Something always happens in Kromah's life. Now she is in the United States because she is one of the worthy winners of the exchange program. It has always been a desire for her to attend American High School. Living and studying in the USA, she can be much closer to the American lifestyle and discover the good and bad sides of one of her favorite countries.

"Zeta is an intelligent young woman who is very driven and confident in her abilities as a soccer player. She can use the English language to her advantage. Her writing style lets you know that her intelligence is high. Zeta also stays away from the drama that many girls like to create. She will be successful in her life." says her host mother.

Because the primary language of Liberia is broken English, called Koloqua, Kromah sometimes had difficulty communicating. Koloqua is much faster and sometimes she pronounces words half-heartedly.

"Yesterday Zeta called that in 2 days it is Wocufina. I thought she was telling me about a holiday they celebrate in her country. However, it found out that Wocufina is the World Cup Final. We laughed a lot together." a friend remembers.

Zeta Kromah has already gained much experience in sports, and she often shares her advice. However, she knows she still has a long way to go.

"Once you want to do sport(s), know why you are doing that sport, how it is beneficial, what the impact is, where you want to take it, and whether it is necessary or helpful for your well-being. Sports are essential, but if you do not know why you are doing a particular sport, it is a waste of time. Do a sport you are passionate about and keep pushing to the highest level. Quitting should never be an option for an athlete." Kromah added.
